Peer 1: Chris Ruff (10/10): Chris was always in our meetings and was always a positive addition to the group. He helped keep dying conversations going by being his wonderfully excitable self. He was also the one to originally choose rover for our group project.

Peer 2: Rachelle Basque (10/10): Rachelle always made a positive contribution to our group discussions. She also brought some different viewpoints on topic that I personally would not have thought about. The only negative I can think of is that she was a little shy; however, that didn't seem to hinder her contributions to the group experience.

Peer 3: Tyler Nagle (10/10): Tyler was an extremely eager group member and surprisingly the only arts major in our group. His arguments helped guide our conversations on some very intriguing tangents. I personally can't think of any negatives, he was very present and respectful in all our discussions.

Peer 4: Nicole Sanderson (7.5/10): Nicole joined our group late and also added a different viewpoint. Her opinions at times were a little bit forward and her contributions to our group assignment came at the last minute; however, they were finished before the submission time so no real harm... just a little bit of stress.

Peer ME: Stephen Cole (8/10): Due to a few factors I ended up missing a couple discussions, but I think I pulled my weight and put forward some interesting thoughts and opinions that made a positive impact on our conversations. I think I made a very good effort to think in a less logically way and expand on some ideas that I would normally just dismiss because of predisposed positions on the topic.
